Social gradient in health

Health is largely determined outside the health sector by the social determinants of health, namely the conditions in which people are born, grow, live, work, and age. These determinants shape the distribution of health outcomes across populations, thereby contributing to health inequities. Addressing such inequities requires not only health policies but also social and economic policies. This talk will provide an overview of the social determinants of health and highlight the importance of upstream and behavioural interventions for tackling the root causes of poor health.
